

84. CLEAN UP YOUR OWN MESS

On Main Street, U.S.A. in Disneyland
there is something called the “Honey Pot.”

To put this delicately:
When one has horses, one is responsible for picking up
what the horses leave behind.

Since opening day, it was one mustachioed man’s job
to sweep the manure from the cobblestone street
so that tourists did not take home more
souvenirs than they expected.

If your “horses” make messes —
have the means to clean them up.

It always surprises me when a CEO says, “Gee! I wasn’t aware that our company was cheating the U.S. Public!”

— Oh? Really? —

What a mess!

Either the CEO is lying, or just out-and-out incompetent —
in either case, that person can step down promptly.

When you make a mess, clean it up;
if you’re cleaning up someone else’s mess:

Charge them well.
